YELLOW FEVER

On a clear summer day in 1991, in the parking lot of the Montlhéry racetrack, glinting in the sun were two magnificent yellow machines, stretching out into the distance like they longed to be a blur of speed. They caught the eye, and crouching down low, a snap was taken. Three months later, referring to that very image he'd taken, Laurent Andre Chapuis put brush to canvas and transformed that moment in time, to art on canvas, capturing all at once the rivalry between two of the most iconic Italian car manufacturers, and the sheer beauty of two of their most evocative machines.
